Appomattox Historic Park Nears Land Acquisition Goal

occupancy of the property conveyed the right to spend the rest of their lives or 25 years, whichever comes first, on it and "a number of people took it."

Condemnation by the government was not resorted to, and it appears, according to Garcia, it won't be before the final deals are closed. "We've had our little situations," he said, "but most of the time we were able to get the land we wanted."

He attributed the lack of disputes during the acquisitions to the fact that affected landowners were aware in advance of the park plans.

"We had workshops" before the management plan was approved, "and meetings with town people. Based on questions and answers, they were alerted to this possibility" before Congress authorized the expansion.

The Park Service's land acquisition division had private appraisals made of the properties involved as the basis for negotiation. Congress appropriated $1,335,000 for the land buys, "but we do not know how much has been spent so far.

"We're getting very close" to the end of the purchasing, the superintendent said. "We have one person getting a scenic easement which is being closed any time now. The money is on its way to the attorney preparing the deed.

"When we say we have only three more people to deal with, that describes how things are."

Most of the area involved, Garcia said, is farmland, and will continue to be. "The use we can foresee is the use it has been subjected to, agricultural use, either raising corn or vegetables, lumber or whatever." Farming can be allowed on the park property through special use permits.

"We do not want the county to suffer" by having the agricultural acres taken out of use, Garcia said, adding, "We have honored commitments the landowners might have had when we acquired the land, for one year. So we're actually working with the owners and the community."

The size of the park allowed by federal law was expanded from the 1,017.6 acres it had been since the 1950's. "It was done on the basis of one person standing at the courthouse and looking around and seeing what he could see," Garcia explained.

There had been talk of a possible housing project within sight of the village a while back, the superintendent said, but, "we moved very fast to acquire that land."

The urgency felt by the government to gain the property in eyeshot of the historic town was because, Garcia said, "We don't know what's going to happen in the future with the heirs of our very good neighbors."

Danger of "visual intrusion" is not his only concern. Another priority in the management plan is setting up an alarm to prevent break-ins at the historic structures, and perhaps more importantly, a fire protection system.

Water for the park comes from a pressurized system with a 500-gallon storage tank. A 24,000-gallon reservoir holds water for emergency use only which, if used to fight a fire, would contaminate the drinking water supply.

On the need for fire protection, the management plan says, "The small amount of reserve water in the well would be inadequate by itself for control of structural fires, an area of great concern.

"Once a fire was detected by visual means and responded to it would likely be in control of the structure and very little could be done except to try to prevent its spread. Since the historic structures are virtually unprotected from fire and will remain so under the existing system, an automatic suppression system would provide the necessary protection."

Garcia said, "We are going about that," with limited money, "and we hope to have that in next year."

Plans also call for development of a new rough camping area along the park's hiking trail by the Sweeney Priory, a tobacco storage building that is the oldest structure in the park area, between Lee's headquarters and the Confederate artillery park northeast of the village.

Garcia said the rough camping area, with no vehicles allowed, is scheduled to be ready this spring.

The potential for threats to the village atmosphere will continue to exist, when the current land acquisition move is finished. "Of course if someone wanted to build a seventy story building" near the park's edge on unzoned land in the county Garcia said, "then that would be a visual intrusion.

"But," he added, "I doubt if the county supervisors would let that happen. They are very fine people concerned about the park."

He praised the pride the community takes in its historic attraction. "People in the community like the park so much they help us out. You don't see any vandalism here," though the park is accessible to the public at several places, and "you don't see any littering.

"People who come to this park are special." Garcia said. "They are interested in the surrender. They come here to admire the park."

Unless there are drastic changes, Garcia doubts the management plan will be revised for a long time. If there are unforseen developments in land use and demand for other uses of the park by the public, "we would have to get the people's input again. It's a fine concept," Garcia said, "letting the people tell us what corrections should be made to this park. Parks are for the people."

scholarship pin Future Farmers of America 8, 9; and certificate for highest academic average in Algebra 1, 9. Daniel is a member of Evergreen United Methodist Church and the United Methodist Youth Federation. His career goal is to be an electronics engineer.

The Governor's School is financed with funds appropriated by the General Assembly.

Students selected for the 1979 Governor's school will be juniors or seniors during the 1979-80 school year. All are either in the top 10 percent in academic standing or display unusual talent in the arts, according to Mrs. Isabelle P. Rucker, director of special programs for the gifted.

The students were selected from 636 candidates nominated by a school superintendent and principal of private institutions. The selections were made by a 19-member committee appointed by the Board of Education. The committee included several former Governor's School participants, parents, teachers, school administrators, and college personnel.

This year's school will be conducted at three sites -- Mary Baldwin College in Staunton from June 17 - July 14, Randolph Macon Woman's College in Lynchburg from June 19 - July 16, and Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg from June 21 - July 18.

One of a Kind Energy Saver

BUSHLAND, Tex. - Wind power has been used for centuries to pump water, but the farm windmill simply does not have the capacity to irrigate field crops, according to researchers with the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Windmills usually pump about 10 gallons per minute, said agricultural engineers Nolan Clark and Arland Schneider with USDA's Science and Education Administration/ Agricultural Research (SEA/AR), but several hundred gallons per minute are necessary for irrigation purposes.

Now, a unique power arrangement called a "wind-assisted system" is being tested for irrigation pumping.

At low wind speeds, an electric motor supplies all of the power to the pump. When the wind speed exceeds 13 miles per hour, the wind turbine supplies mechanical power to the pump thereby reducing the electricity cost.

The blades of the wind turbine are airfoils that produce lift similar to that of an airplane wing and are much more efficient than the traditional drag type blades of a farm windmill.

The scientists point out that the wind-assisted system has two main advantages over systems that rely solely on wind power: water is pumped at the desired rate and pressure, regardless of wind power, and a conventional irrigaton well and verticle turbine pump are used without modification. Also, since the electric motor supplies only part of the power, the system saves electricity. Clark says that the "wind-assisted system is presently the only one of its kind in the world."

The vertical-axis wind turbine, which has produced 70 horsepower in a 43 mph wind, is mechanically coupled to a vertical turbine pump through a commercially available combination gear drive. When the wind turbine is producing power, it rotates at a constant speed of 90 revolutions per minutes. Speed increasers installed at the bottom of the drive shaft beneath the rotor increase shaft speed up to 1780 rpm for the pump.

The system also has a large disk brake, and a clutch in the wind turbine drive shaft that makes reverse transfer of power from the motor to the turbine impossible.

The research is funded by the Department of Energy and the USDA scientists Clark and Schneider are working with Drs. Vaughn Nelson, Earl Gilmore, and Bob Barieau with the Alternative Energy Institute, West Texas State University.

Your teenager's attitude toward alcohol begins to form long before the legal age for drinking and is learned earliest in the home, say many experts on child behavior. Young people brought up by responsible adults are more likely to make the right decisions later on and more likely to realize that drinking too much too often is not grownup.
